To Unitholders

Market Summary

The global economy in the second half of 2025 continued to navigate a landscape shaped by geopolitical tensions, evolving trade dynamics, and diverging monetary policies. Growth momentum softened but avoided a sharp downturn, with global GDP expected to decelerate as tariff - related distortions and policy uncertainty weighed on major economies. Global equity markets reflected this mix of resilience and caution. International markets outpaced U.S. equities as investors rotated toward regions with more attractive valuations and improving macro conditions. Yet volatility persisted due to renewed tariff announcements, geopolitical escalation, and lingering uncertainty around corporate earnings. Despite these headwinds, risk appetite remained supported by expectations of policy easing, particularly in Europe and parts of Asia, and by continued strength in AI - related investment themes. Overall, global markets entered year - end with cautious optimism, balancing macro risks against improving financial conditions and recovering sentiment.

Global bond markets delivered mixed performance in the second half of 2025, amid shifting expectations for monetary policy, easing inflation pressures, and ongoing geopolitical tensions. U.S. Treasury yields moved higher toward year - end as the yield curve steepened, while short - term yields declined slightly, reflecting growing expectations of future monetary easing. This trend was consistent with the three consecutive interest - rate cuts implemented by the Federal Reserve during the year. Although bond - market volatility moderated somewhat, persistent uncertainty surrounding inflation, fiscal policy developments, and geopolitical risks continued to weigh on investor sentiment throughout the latter half of the year.
